ORIENTAL RELIGIONS IN ROMAN PAGANISM

By FRANZ CUMONT

With an introductory essay by Grant Showerman. Authorized Translation. Pp. 320. Cloth, $2.00 net (8s. 6d.)

"The Propagation of the Oriental religions with the development of Neo-Platonism is the leading fact in the moral history of the pagan empire. Theologians were for a long time more inclined to consider the continuity of the Jewish tradition than the causes that disturbed it; but a reaction has taken place, and to-day they endeavor to show that the church has borrowed considerably from the conceptions and ritualistic ceremonies of the pagan mysteries. Earliest Christian communities were founded, formed and developed in the heart of Oriental populations, Semites, Phrygians, and Egyptians. The new faith poured its revelation into the hallowed moulds of earlier religions because in that form alone could the world in which it developed receive its message. This is approximately the point of view adopted by the latest historians."
